

Arrowhead

The website structure and content manager for schools.

Pages can be edited from any on-line computer.

Run and maintain your own website using only word-processing skills.

No limit on number of pages!

Using the World Wide Web to develop and expand resources in school has become a part of the curriculum. Our children need to be computer literate and know how to effectively use the huge knowledge base available via the web.

Head teachers and their staff are being encouraged to lead this initiative by creating their own school websites. Despite compelling arguments for the benefits, your school, in common with the majority of schools, probably hasn't got one. As a busy professional the thought of acquiring the necessary skills to design, build and maintain a high quality website must be a daunting one. You may have looked into having your site designed for you by a third party and cannot justify the initial and then continuing maintenance costs.

Our managing director's wife, an experienced primary school teacher, had been discussing this problem with her colleagues for some time. They had developed very clear ideas as to why their school wanted a web site and what they wanted it to achieve. They were equally clear that no one in the school possessed the necessary skills, or the time to develop them. Ondev's main product line is a range of software tools that minimise the technical skills required to build and maintain complex business-to-business web sites. We already had a product that empowers non-technical content writers and editors to add material to sites without the need for technical training.

The connection was all too obvious and before long Ondev ArrowHead was born - a structured framework which, with the unseen backing of the very latest programming techniques, gives you the ability to set up and maintain a web site using word processing skills already developed by teachers and children alike.

Key Features:

Headed by your school logo or other graphic of your choice, pages can be edited from any on-line computer, using your own secure user name and password.

Run and maintain your own website using only the word-processing skills already familiar to staff and children-no technical knowledge needed.

Site Structure

An Ondev Arrowhead website is made up of three main structured areas:

1. The public area, seen by all visitors to your site.
2. Master Control Panel. This password-protected area controls the look of the whole site, the contents of the pages, and the navigation structure.
3. Content Manager Control Panel. This is a password-protected area where the content of all pages can be created or altered.

Pages in the public area may also be 'hidden'. Viewing hidden pages requires a special login so you can control who can view them Ideal for private communication with staff, children or parents.

Training.

Training, if required, is charged at Â£200+VAT per half day session.

This is carried out on your own premises and the fee allows as many staff as you like to attend.
